The first of the double A side offering constantly keeps you on your toes, switching from a piano-led classical sounding song to a much more raw, riff led track within seconds.

Reminiscent of No Doubt or a pop version of Nightwish, there are influences everywhere here, ranging from pop punk to metal, with a drop of tribal banging to make you think outside the obvious.

With interesting influences being combined into strong female fronted pop rock the album is definitely going to be an experience to check out when it's released in September.
